Room for th'express

The Second Book of the Catch Club or Merry Companions, c. 1700

Henry Purcell (1659-1695)
ed. Raymond Nagem

[1.] Room, room, room, room, room for th'express, at

[2.] Hark! hark! hark! the Guns of the Tower ring,

[3. to our] conquering Army loud Praises, loud length here it comes; Limrick's our own, Limrick's our ring it in peals, we'll drink round the Bonfires, we'll drink round the Praises let's sing, and now Monsieur French man, and now Monsieur own, be it known, be it known to all Grums.

Bonfires, Huzza, Huzza to the Bells, [3.] to our French man have at you, have at you next Spring.

1 The second siege of Limerick in Western Ireland ended in October 1691 with a victory for the attacking Willamite forces. The Irish Jacobite defenders were allied with France, and about 20,000 men, women, and children left for France following the defeat in what was called the "Flight of the Wild Geese." William viewed the conflict in Ireland, in the European context of the Nine Year's War (1688-1697), as a proxy invasion by France.

2 Probably derived from "grumblers"; figuratively, supporters of the Jacobite cause.

3 The Tower of London, where gun salutes were fired on important occasions.

4. Spelled correctly here, but during the period, often deliberately mispronounced "Monseer" for effect.

Copyright © 2022 Raymond Nagem. Distributed under the terms of the CPDL license (http://cpdl.org).
This edition may be freely duplicated, distributed, performed and recorded.